Aging and Disability: Crossing Network Lines

There is a growing population at the intersection of aging and disability who increasingly rely on old community service systems for care--systems that currently cannot handle the increase in demand and the crossing of the care boundaries that have been set up between the aging and those with disability.

In response to this need, Michelle Putnam has edited this volume to reflect the current research, facilitate collaboration across service networks, and encourage movement toward more effective service policies. Professional stakeholders evaluate the bridges and barriers to crossing network lines, and a chapter on current websites, agencies, and coalitions provides the much needed tools to bring collaboration into practice.

With contributions from those on the forefront of these issues, Aging and Disability will provide a basis for understanding why our aging and disability networks have so long been separated and what we can do to bridge that gap.

Yolanda Sartain:

As a student exactly feel bored in order to reading. If their teacher requested them to go to the library as well as to make summary for some guide, they are complained. Just small students that has reading's heart and soul or real their pastime. They just do what the professor want, like asked to go to the library. They go to generally there but nothing reading seriously. Any students feel that examining is not important, boring and also can't see colorful pics on there. Yeah, it is for being complicated. Book is very important for you personally. As we know that on this era, many ways to get whatever we wish. Likewise word says, many ways to reach Chinese's country. So , this Aging and Disability: Crossing Network Lines can make you really feel more interested to read.
