Il sentiero delle illusioni perdute (Italian Edition) Stefano Sessa

Metà degli anni '80, ultimi sussulti della guerra fredda. Kadmos, Grecia, assolata e allucinata isola del Dodecaneso, abitata anche da una misconosciuta popolazione pre-ellenica. Due ragazzi italiani innamorati, Laura e Francesco, che si sono incontrati pochi giorni prima sull'isola, vengono trovati morti ai piedi di un promontorio. Sembra un incidente, ma c'è un particolare inquietante: dopo un volo di 30 metri sugli scogli sottostanti sono ancora mano nella mano. La versione ufficiale della polizia, quella dell'incidente, sembra in effetti la più probabile, se non fosse per quel particolare fuori posto, quasi incomprensibile, ma che nessuno all'epoca cerca di approfondire, perché è comunque certo che erano soli quando sono caduti, e dunque i fatti oggettivamente riscontrabili sul come si siano svolti gli eventi la notte in cui sono morti non lasciano margini per altre ipotesi e infatti non verranno più messi in discussione. Ma vengono invece messe in discussione, partendo da quel particolare che stona con l'ipotesi dell'incidente, le motivazioni della morte: forse non si tratta di un incidente, ma di una scelta consapevole da parte di Laura e Francesco?
